

HAIR THICKER AFTER STEINACH OPERATION

That Is Only One of Many
Results of It, Writes Dr.
Harry Benjamin.

LESS BLOOD PRESSURE

Experiment Is Not 'Rejuvenation,' but 'Regeneration,' Authority Avers.

'PERFECTLY HARMLESS'

Worst That Can Happen Is
That Nothing at All happens, Doctor Says.

Judging by a paper on the Steinach operation, by Dr. Harry Benjamin of this city in the August number of American Medicine, the public understands little of it as yet.

The medical profession has yet some distance to go before it has a clear understanding of the subject, according to the article. Medical men, especially in Europe, are deeply interested.

Dr. Benjamin finds that the effects of the operation are many and that the result most frequently referred to in connection with the operation is more or less casual, and sometimes not noticed at all. His personal experience is based on eighteen cases, in sixteen of which he operated, using the technique recommended by Steinach himself and employed in Berlin and Vienna, in which cities Dr. Benjamin studied the subject last year.

Objecting to the use of the word "rejuvenation" and substituting for preference either "regeneration" or "restoration" as better defining the most commonly observed effect, Dr. Benjamin asserts that increase in bodily weight and a decrease in the blood pressure are most frequent and more general changes resulting.

Grows New Hair.

"It seems to me," he writes at one point, "that in the Steinach operation we really have a method to reduce high blood pressure in a way that could not be achieved by any other means."

"In cases of normal and low blood pressure we have likewise observed a further slight lowering, but with subsequent increase."

"Very interesting observations have been made by Prof. Schmidt and Levy Lenz in Berlin," he writes later, "and I had the opportunity of verifying these observations, namely a new growth of pigmented hair several months after the vasoligature. . . . There can be no doubt that just as well as Steinach and others have observed the regrowth of hair in animals, a similar regrowth took place in certain very responsive cases in men. Schmidt, for instance, describes a case of a man with thin gray hair which a few months after the vasoligature took on the appearance of mixed growth, the new hair coming out in the original color. But let me repeat that such are exceptional cases. We have no right to promise any patient undergoing the Steinach operation a success of that sort."

The experiments performed on rats, guinea pigs and dogs, he said, brought more marked results than the treatment of human beings. He continued:

"The more complicated human machine offers, naturally, many more obstacles, so that the actual 'rejuvenation' doubtless observed in animals has only rarely been ascertained to the same extent in the case of man. It would be interesting to know whether inferior races would offer greater possibilities."

Hearing Is Recovered.

There is no proof, the doctor said, that any harm has ever been done through the Steinach operation and the worst that can happen is that "nothing happens," that the operation fails. He goes on to give the results achieved in eight cases, holding that the other cases were too recent to justify conclusions. His first case was that of an unmarried clerk of 55 years suffering from mental depression, lack of energy and "all in." Following the operation he gained twelve pounds in weight, his color became healthier, his appetite improved and the depression disappeared. There were no other results.

Substantially the same effects were shown in the other cases, with variations, one man, a college professor, regaining, to an extent, his hearing. In all instances a restoration of energy was marked, and whether there were disorders of one sort or another a distinct improvement was noted. In closing his article Dr. Benjamin writes:

"I am drawing my final conclusions from these cases, but let the reports speak for themselves. I would want to observe a greater number of cases first, and especially for a longer period. It seems, however, that the results correspond on the whole with those reported by Steinach, Lichenstein, Peter Schmidt, Levy Lenz in Europe and Chetwood, Wolpert and Michel in this country. In as far as there is a distinct enduring influence in the sense of a stimulation and restitution. No harmful effect has resulted anywhere, and I would like to call attention to the fact that a specific sexual stimulation is not evident, but appears only as a part of the general regeneration."

GERMAN AMBASSADOR MISQUOTED ON NEGROES

Does Not Approve of Moroccans in Occupation Army.

Otto L. Wiedfeldt, German Ambassador to the United States, who returned from Germany Friday on the steamship Reliance, said yesterday he was misquoted in an article appearing in The New York Herald regarding French negro troops on the Rhine.

Mr. Wiedfeldt does not approve of France occupying parts of Germany with Moroccans, and the inhabitants of the occupied areas still feel as strongly against such occupation as they did when the blacks first came, he declared. He said the German people hoped these troops would be withdrawn and that "every woman in Germany would bless the name of Senator Hitchcock" and other American statesmen who have protested, if their efforts resulted in ridding Germany of French negroes.

POLICE HUNT ADMIRER OF ACTRESS SUICIDE

Youth Who Tried to Die
When Girl Did Vanishes.

Search was being made last night by the police for Dominico Rango, said to have been the fiance of Lillian Gay, the nineteen-year-old actress who killed herself Friday on the stage of the National Winter Garden at East Houston street and Second avenue.

When he heard of the suicide Rango tried to kill himself, then disappeared in his blue racing car. He has not been seen since. His friends fear he has carried out his threat. A different version of the girl's death was given yesterday by her mother, Mrs. Christian Gay, with whom she lived at 104 Elm-mett street, Newark. She denied that Rango was her daughter's fiance and declared instead that he had been trying to force his unwelcome attentions upon her. Mrs. Gay said that during the rehearsal Friday Rango suddenly appeared from the wings and Lillian, in panic, ran to her dressing room and drank shoe polish in an attempt to frighten Rango away. The mother said she did not believe her daughter knew the content of the bottle was poison.

Mrs. Vernon De Haven, sister of the dead girl, agreed with the mother that Lillian did not kill herself deliberately. Funeral services will be in the home at Newark to-morrow afternoon. The Rev. E. L. Hubbard of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, Elizabeth, will officiate.
